Five years ago, I had the most memorable trip to Tokyo Disneyland. The first thing that my parents told my sister and me after we entered Disneyland was that we can enjoy ourselves but the only thing is that if we want to go anywhere, we need them to go with us. Then my dad handed both my sister and me each a note with his phone number on it so if we got lost, we could call him. After my dad and mom finished warning my sister and me, we went to a souvenir store. We bought many Disney dolls, especially toys from the movie Frozen. As you can see, my sister and I loved Frozen.

After going to the souvenir store it was lunchtime so we went to eat at a restaurant. We were so excited we forgot to ask our parents to go with us. As we were waiting for the food to be served, a Frozen parade car went by. My sister and I were so excited that we forgot to ask our parents to go with us as we followed it. We ran to the main parade, but my sister soon found it boring and went back alone to the restaurant where we ate lunch. I was concentrating on the parade and didn't think about how to get back. After the performance ended, I realized that my sister was gone. I was so scared that I felt like my tears were coming out just like a waterfall. Fortunately, a lady that works at Disneyland took me to the Baby Care Center. Then I used the phone number that my dad gave me earlier to call my dad. He came and picked me up and my family enjoyed the rest of the day.

After this experience in Disneyland, I learned that I need to be more careful in unfamiliar places, and I should listen to what my parents say. If I had been more careful in Disneyland and listened to my parents. I wouldn't have just run to the parade car and not cared about anything else. However, I am very thankful that I had this experience so that I can learn a great lesson. And I hope I never make the same mistake again.
